Tenses and Reading Comprehension

Verbs help us express actions, but did you know they change depending on time? This is where tenses come in. The present tense describes actions happening now. For example, Aditi teaches Sara how to solve complex math problems with ease.

The verb teaches shows that the action is happening in the present.

On the other hand, the past tense tells us about actions that have already happened. If we talk about yesterday, we say,
Aditi taught Sara how to solve complex math problems with ease.

The verb taught is the past tense of teach. Notice how the word changed? Many verbs follow this pattern, like run (present) and ran (past), or write (present) and wrote (past). While these changes might seem daunting at first, with practice, they become easier to recognize.

Some verbs, called regular verbs, simply add -ed in the past tense, like walk → walked or listen → listened. Others, called irregular verbs, change completely, like go → went or eat → ate. Learning these differences requires a diligent effort, but it helps in forming grammatically correct sentences.

Understanding tenses helps us tell clear stories. Imagine saying, Yesterday I play football—it sounds strange, right? Instead, we should say, Yesterday I played football. Using the correct tense makes our speech and writing more accurate and meaningful. Even in casual conversation, being articulate with tenses can make communication smoother and more eloquent!

Questions

1. Correct the sentence: Last night, she eat dinner at 8 PM.
2. Why is it incorrect to say, Yesterday, I run in the park?
3. Create a sentence using a verb in the present tense.
4. Create a sentence using a verb in the past tense.
5. What does the word articulate mean?
6. Which of the following is an example of a verb in the past tense?
7. a) Teach
8. b) Taught
9. c) Teaching
10. d) Teaches
11. What would be incorrect about the sentence "Yesterday I play football"? How should it be corrected?

Questions

1. Correct the sentence: Last night, she ate dinner at 8 PM.
2. Why is it incorrect to say, "Yesterday, I run in the park"?
It is incorrect because "run" is in the present tense. Since the action happened yesterday, the past tense "ran" should be used.
3. Create a sentence using a verb in the present tense.
She plays badminton every evening.
4. Create a sentence using a verb in the past tense.
He visited his grandparents yesterday.
5. What does the word articulate mean?
Articulate means to express thoughts and ideas clearly and effectively.
6. Which of the following is an example of a verb in the past tense?
b) Taught
7. What would be incorrect about the sentence "Yesterday I play football"? How should it be corrected?
The sentence is incorrect because "play" is in the present tense, but "yesterday" indicates a past action. The correct sentence is: "Yesterday, I played football."

Thank you